The Challenge: High-Quality Curriculum Options for a Flexible Learning Model

Strike School is a private, online learning option for Kindergarten-12th grade students. Based in Oregon, the school supports students across eight states. Founded in 2021, amid the COVID-19 pandemic and a national increase in demand for online learning options—Strike School needed an effective digital curriculum that worked for a diverse range of age groups. And a solution-focused education partner, like FlexPoint, that would support their mission to empower students and families to have a choice in how, and where, they want to learn.

The Solution: Customizable Online Curriculum to Support Students, Families

FlexPoint licensed its award-winning digital curriculum and provided a seamless experience for dozens of students enrolled in the Strike School. FlexPoint's customizable curriculum enabled the school to create a unique online learning environment that directly aligns with a student's individual path.

In addition to the online learning curriculum provided by FlexPoint, Strike School supports its choice driven model through on-demand and live sessions with learning coaches (who are state-certified teachers), and virtual classrooms with time to collaborate with classmates.

// We know that students and families will have a positive experience with it, and it is very important that students can get started right away after enrollment. //

Since courses are ready-to-go and customizable to state standards, Strike School can support students and families across the nation in a way that is tailored to how they learn best. "Having the FlexPoint curriculum available for all of our students is a cornerstone for our program," says Shahla Lodhie, Director of Enrollment and Co-Founder at Strike School.

// I believe that individualization is of the utmost importance in education, and I love the way that it is offered in such a rich setting at Strike. It seems like the ideal combination of support, structure, and choice. //
